Documents

The type of documentation required for delivery of equipment may also be required by law. This documentation could be instruction manuals, safety manuals, operations manuals, spare part lists, test results, certificate of conformity, technical files and others.

These documents could be substantial documents of many pages and in some cases can be costly. These translation costs will vary depending on the language involved and on the level of difficulty of the context and must be included in your evaluation of your market.

Some legal or technical translations may need to be reviewed by another source for accuracy. Especially in cases of legal translations as some aspects of the document may not be fully understood by professional translators.
